Large screen phone for elderly

Angela Stringfellow on September 7, 2018 14:24:43 If you think mobile phones are exclusively (or even predominantly) used by young people, you should be wrong. Everyone can benefit from having a mobile phone - in fact, there are many mobile phones and smartphones designed specifically for the elderly. These phones emphasize features that would benefit the older generation, such as the single-toe SOS button. Mobile phones provide seniors with a lot of security and entertainment benefits. In addition to the SOS button, there are many health applications that can help in tracking and recording health information, such as blood pressure readings, and can also be useful tools for recalling medications. Mobile devices are also great for connecting seniors to the outside world, helping them maintain social connections even with friends and family who don't live nearby and fight isolation. In addition, smartphones can be used for fun activities such as playing video games (not just for kids!). As you look through this list of the best mobile phones for seniors, consider these factors: There are many types of mobile phones on the market. You can go on a smartphone where you can use millions of apps, or a simple flip phone can be all you need. Buy what suits you. If you want to save lots of photos, music, videos, and apps, you'll want a phone with a lot of storage capacity. Some smartphones have internal storage and the ability to use a micro SD card, which gives you the best storage option. On the other hand, basic cell phones have limited storage – if you're just dealing with speaking and texting, a basic cell phone will probably be enough for your needs. Prepaid or contract. Contracts have their place, but prepaid phones really give you the freedom to do what you want with your phone whenever you want. They are often cheaper and you don't have to deal with contracts and cancellation fees. Smartphones generally have better quality cameras than flip phones and other basic mobile devices. If you have (and share) a lot of photos and videos, a smartphone is a better choice. Phones designed with seniors in mind have many features that more widely used smartphones don't have, including one-touch emergency buttons, large dials and photo directories. Be sure to take note of these options and choose a mobile phone with the features that you will use the most. To help you easily find the right mobile phone for yourself or someone close to you, we've collected 50 mobile phones and smartphones ideal for older adults. The devices below are divided into two categories: smartphones and basic mobile phones. If you're not a fan of phone apps and newer features, focus your attention on basic cell phones.
